Understanding religion in modern Britain

Looking in and looking out
The steps in the argument

Looking inwards
• the British case
• the factors to take into account

Looking outwards
• the crucial question
• the European Enlightenment
• the International Panel on Social Progress
What Britain is
the factors to take into account

There are six:
• cultural heritage
• vicarious religion – a public utility
• a shift from obligation to consumption – a market
• new arrivals
• secular alternatives
• Europe as an exceptional case

Drawing these together – a tentative conclusion
A continuing/remorseless process of secularization (bringing with it a worrying loss of religious literacy), offset by growth in some areas.

The increasing salience of religion in public as well as private debate, a tendency encouraged by the ever more obvious presence of religion in the modern world order.

We talk more about something that we do less

A challenging combination
In more detail

Best summarized as ‘a persistent paradox’

Hence the subtitle of my 2015 book
Variations on the theme

Regional differences

England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland

London

the factors are differently weighted

new factors to take into account

David Martin (1978) – Europe is a unity (one Caesar and one God); Europe is a diversity (the existence of nations)

the tensions and partnerships that ensue

Brexit
Looking outwards

The crucial question

Is Europe/ Britain secular because it is modern; or is Europe secular because it is European?

A great deal depends on the answer

• huge implications for the understanding of religion and the tools that we bring to bear on this process
• conceptual maps
• understanding absence as well as presence
What Europe/ Britain is not

It is not a vibrant religious market as is found in the US

It is not a part of the world where Christianity is growing exponentially, often in Pentecostal forms, as is found in the global south

It is not a part of the world dominated by faiths other than Christian, but is increasingly penetrated by these

It is not for the most part subject to the violence often associated with religion and religious difference in other parts of the globe – the more so if religion becomes entangled in political conflict
Global religion
1979
Four leaders and five countries

Mrs Thatcher, Deng Xiaoping, John-Paul II, Ayatollah Khomeini
UK, China, Poland, Iran, Afghanistan

In each case a ‘strong’ state and a commitment to secularism give way to a free market and persistent religion

Nobody saw this coming

Why not? The assumptions of social science

The Enlightenment and social science

Manuel Vasquez (from El Salvador) – sociology as the epistemological child of the Enlightenment
• rationality/ empirical observation – the ultimate sources of knowledge, as opposed to faith and revelation

Drawing on Auguste Comte – the opposition between theology and sociology is central to incipient sociology’s self understanding

Religion as the intellectual and dying ‘other’
Secularization is built into the DNA of the discipline
Does this matter?

Europe
• a relatively good fit between sociological thinking about religion and empirical realities, keeping in mind regional variations, growing complexities, and unexpected developments (e.g. London)

The global context
• universalizing the theory causes trouble
• my/our experience with the IPSP
What is the IPSP?

The International Panel on Social Progress (IPSP) harnessed the competence of hundreds of experts about social issues

• to deliver a report addressed to social actors, movements, organizations, politicians and decision-makers

• to provide them with the best expertise on questions that bear on social change

Full independence from political parties, governments, and organizations with a partisan agenda

Secondary goal – to foster research on the topics it covered
Chapter 16 in the ISSP report 1

2015 – an invitation from the IPSP to co-lead (with Nancy Ammerman) the chapter team dealing with religion

• the significance of religion as a factor in social progress on a global scale

A marked shift in attitudes amongst those who work in the field of religion

Much less evident in the mainstreams of the social sciences, where European paradigms persist
Chapter 16 in the ISSP report 2

Starts from the premise that some 80 percent of the world’s population affirms some kind of religious identification, a proportion that is growing rather than declining.

The peak of secularity/ secularism – 1970s
Significant changes in the former Soviet Union and in China
Plus differential birthrates

Note throughout – an emphasis on lived religion, rather than belief as such.
Chapter 16 in the ISSP report 3

Emphasizes the significance of belief and practice in everyday lives and local contexts, analyzing the impact of religion and its relevance to social progress in a wide variety of fields:

- family, gender and sexuality
- diversity and democracy
- conflict and peace-making
- everyday wellbeing
- care for the earth
Further . . .

Argues that researchers and policy makers pursuing social progress will benefit from careful attention to the power of religious ideas to motivate, of religious practices to shape ways of life, of religious communities to mobilize and extend the reach of social change, and of religious leaders and symbols to legitimate calls to action.

All of these, however, can be put to either good or ill, for which reason assessment of particular religions in specific contexts is essential.
In conclusion

Five interconnected themes:

- the persistence of religion in the twenty-first century
- the importance of context in discerning outcomes
- the need for cultural competence relative to religion
- the significance of religion in initiating change
- the benefits of well-judged partnerships

A continuing need for critical but appreciative assessment and the demonstrable benefits of creative partnerships
